Kristin, your story just made me cry. He was a sweet sweet man. I met him working over nights at Valero on 127. He and I share the same last name and I joked if we were related cause I'm not from here (KY) but knew I had relatives of that last name in the south. Plus we both are die hard Packers fans and not from Wisconsin. I'm from Chicago suburbs and always got hell from people fir being a traitor. He always would come in after closing bar on 80 to get food. He would make me smile and laugh. He asked how I was healthwise cause I'm in heart failure. He met me when I was still wearing tye Lifeless defibrillator and got me to be calm about having yye surgery to implant the defibrillator in my chest. When working at Anchor Liquor the last 2 yrs he would stop in and we'd chat. Again, always kind and polite asking how I was and how my furkids were. I'm a huge animal person and he knew I had quite a few. He knew the work I did with feeding stray cats where I lived too. Always Said I was crazy cause I had a big heart that couldn't say no to animals. And to people as well. As I did with many others I'd give advice. When he had his 1st heart attack I jumped on him and said he needed to see my cardiologist Thannoli. I wanted to make sure he had the best cardiologist. No way I was gonna let this cruel world take another great person too soon. I told him to let me know if he needed anything or had questions about heart failure anytime. When I heard about his 2nd episode I was even more devastated. Since then alot happened in life...for both of us. I reached out to him but never heard back. I knew he was handling business and probably needed to just be in his own thoughts. To hear he passed away kills me inside.

Jeff was an incredible man. Kind, caring, compassionate, a loving soul, genuine, respectful especially to women, funny, intelligent and just a remarkable guy. I'm gonna miss his laugh, his comforting smile and those eyes that just lit up a room. His personality is one you rarely come across. He was a great friend. A damn good father and grandfather. A hard worker/businessman. He was that brother you always wanted for many (me included) & a great male "father" role model to many that needed that. He will be missed by everyone. I will miss him very much.

Jeff, it was a pleasure meeting you, a blessing knowing you and the greatest getting to know you. I'll miss you more than you could ever imagine my handsome buddy! Watch over us here. I know you'll be our greatest guardian angel. ❤️
